Specification

1. The abstract of the disclosure is objected to because the abstract contains more than 150 words. Correction is required. See MPEP § 608.01(b).

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 102

2. The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless –

(b) the invention was patented or described in a printed publication in this or a foreign country or in public use or on sale in this country, more than one year prior to the date of application for patent in the United States.

3. Claims 1-2 and 5-6 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(b) as being anticipated by Sakoda (US 4,542,269) cited by applicant. Sakoda discloses a cooking appliance with switching assembly comprising a cooking apparatus main body (1) that includes a heating chamber (9); and a door opening and shutting part (2) that openably and closably locks the object-to-be-heated take-out opening of the heating chamber (9) to shut the take-out opening, and removes the locked state of the take-out opening to open the take-out opening, wherein the door opening and shutting part (2) includes: a handle (5) which opens and shuts the an opening and shutting door (2); and a door key (12) which is provided on the opening and shutting door (2) so as to be movable in the longitudinal direction thereof in conjunction with an opening and shutting operation of the handle (5), and is integrally formed with first (3) and second (4) engaging portions, the first (3) and second (4) engaging portions respectively being provided on the two portions of the door key (12) spaced a predetermined distance from each other in the longitudinal direction of the door key (12) so as to project toward the heating chamber

(9); wherein the cooking apparatus main body (1) includes a door hook (23) which holds the door key (12) by engaging with the first (3) and second (4) engaging portions, which are inserted into the cooking apparatus main body (1) when the opening and shutting door (2) is shut; wherein the door hook (23) includes first (28) and second (30) switches which respectively switch so as to electrically conduct a power supply circuit for heating the heating chamber by carrying out depressing operations of the first (3) and second (4) engaging portions when the door hook (23) is engaged with the first (3) and second (4) engaging portions; and wherein a play in a connecting portion between the handle (5) and the door key (12) is set as a distance which corresponds to a distance that the door key (12) moves in the longitudinal direction thereof when the opening and shutting door (2) is switched from an opened state to a shut state.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

4. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

5. Claims 3-4 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Sakoda (US 4,542,269), in view of JP2001-50543A both cited by applicant. Sakoda discloses substantially all features of the claimed invention except the leading end portions of the first and second engaging portions project upwardly. JP2001-50543A discloses leading end portions (4a) of the first (4) and second (4) engaging portions project upwardly (Figure 2). It would have been obvious to one ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to utilize in Sakoda leading end portions of the first and second engaging portions project upwardly as taught by JP2001-50543A in order to engage with door switches to electrically conduct the power supply circuit.

6. Claim 7 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Sakoda (US 4,542,269) cited by applicant, in view of Katoh (US 4,672,160). Sakoda discloses substantially all features of the claimed invention except the first engaging portion depresses the first door switch after the first engaging portion presses down the short switch. Katoh discloses, figures 9-10, a first engaging portion (31) depresses the first door switch (41) after the first engaging portion (31) presses down the short switch (42). It would have been obvious to one ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to utilize in Skoda a first engaging portion depresses the first door switch after the first engaging portion presses down the short switch as taught by Katoh in order to open the safety circuit.

7. Claim 8 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Sakoda (US 4,542,269) cited by applicant, in view of Johns (US 1,213,651) and Donner (US 4,101,750). Sakoda discloses substantially all features of the claimed invention except the handle is connected to the door key by a rack and pinion mechanism and the door key is operated in a vertical direction in accordance with a rotation operation of the handle. Johns discloses, figures 2-3, a handle (17) is connected to the door key (22) by a rack (15) and pinion mechanism (21). Donner discloses, figures 3-4, a door key (80) is operated in a vertical direction in accordance with a rotation operation of the handle (15). It would have been obvious to one ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to utilize in Skoda a handle is connected to the door key by a rack and pinion mechanism as taught by Johns in order to operate the door, and a door key is operated in a vertical direction in accordance with a rotation operation of the handle as taught by Donner in order to operate to unlatch the disposition.
